This room is about four times the size of my living room. I just stood there, staring, in a daze. All of our sons had dad-meets-mom dates. I remember the last time I was in this room. It was in 1998, when Josiah was born. We were all in this room, the three older children and I. Then it was just me. The room hadn't changed much. Back in the mother-of-the-bride position, the desk was in front of the door, that window with the curtains removed, and the chair was in front of the window. Now there's a large, comfortable chair with a foot rest. There are a few pictures and a Bible, a good book to read. In the back is a large shelf filled with ornaments and pictures. The room is much bigger than I remember. The best surprise was a heart for Mother's Day 2011. As I walked in, I was met with, "Hey, you're back. So, are you ready to get married?" 20 comments: Wow! What an amazing room. I love the craftsmanship and style. My dad passed away two years ago and his house didn't change much either. It was still his bedroom. Mom kept a special place in the top of his dresser for his letters from other guys during WW2. I remember walking in and seeing a letter from a guy named Raymond. He wrote my dad letters every day until the day he died and those letters are still in that room. So glad you stopped by, Joyce. Your comment made me nostalgic. I remember visiting my dad's bedroom, too. That time was the last time I saw him. Then came the funeral, and a few months after that I started dating him. The room is wonderful. I love the desk in the room. I couldn't imagine sitting at the computer and writing a letter to him and not having a desk to do it on. It's a comfort to know that he could
