Relation of the type of initial resection to limb salvage in cancer of the ankle joint. There is controversy regarding the optimum type of initial resection in the treatment of cancer of the ankle joint. The efficacy of surgery (bone and soft tissue) in achieving local control was evaluated in patients treated by limb salvage procedures. From 1962 through 1991, 63 patients were treated with primary resections for malignant tumors of the ankle. The type of initial resection was reviewed in relation to the probability of local recurrence and the survival time after recurrence was noted. Of the 28 patients who had an initial resection of the bone, the probability of local recurrence was higher than that of the patients whose initial resection was of the soft tissue ( $P = 0.0007$ ). Ten of the 25 patients who had a primary resection of the soft tissue were alive without evidence of disease after a follow-up period of 8 to 13 years (mean, 10.3 years). Two of the 25 patients were alive with metastases. In contrast, five of 11 patients who

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Chris Irvine, a communications director for Rep. Darrell Issa (R-CA), conceded to news outlet True Pundit that a “sexual harassment” allegation made by a former Issa aide is “true,” though Irvine had insisted only that it was “unsubstantiated.” In an interview with True Pundit on Monday, Irvine was asked about a report on Friday by The Intercept’s Lee Fang that former Issa aide Laura Eimiller accused Issa of sexual harassment. In the report, Eimiller claimed that, when she was employed as a communications consultant for Issa in the early 2000s, the Congressman rubbed her feet, walked in and out of her hotel room, touched her arms and suggested that she could possibly meet his
