emergency department visits decreased by 47% to 53% and remained stable or declined during the first three months of implementation of the new system at Elmhurst hospital, city health officials said. “The findings are encouraging and we are going to be looking at this and doing more studies across the city,” said Dr. Kenneth P. Ginsberg, the hospital’s chief of surgery, who managed the system rollout. “We have seen good results.” The city Health and Hospitals Corp. began rolling out the Electronic Health Record in January, which also allows doctors to share lab results, radiology images and other information from other hospitals. The system saved the city about $1.4 million in the first six months. Study participants also had a faster average time from “call in” to a nurse triage to a doctor in the emergency room, a key driver of crowding and wait times. The patients averaged nine minutes, up from seven minutes in 2009. The study was requested by Mayor Michael Bloomberg and published by the American Journal of Medicine. The city is spending $3.5 billion over five years to implement the system
