Hard Knock Life (Unfinished) Marcus Graham This is a rough draft of a story that I wrote in early 2007. I still want to finish this, but many times life gets in the way. I'm thinking of taking this off the internet for a bit, so what you see is the draft I was working on then, not the latest, even if it is roughly the same as now. In 2005 Game Boy Advance got a new motion sensor thing, and all of a sudden you could play your games while walking. Who knew? I was an old Saturn owner and had been wondering when Nintendo would release a character-adaptation system for the games. I speculated that you could be able to have 100% perspective, and would be able to walk across the country and play Sonic, and that got this semi-see-through concept of something like Gran Turismo out of me. Imagine that! You could play a GBA game on a boardwalk, or in Starbucks, or on a subway platform... Beep Beep! About a year ago, the motion sensors on the Game Boy Advance sold out on ebay. I figured I had better start dinking around with the technology since I was suddenly interested in it, instead of just wondering when it would come. Here's what I accomplished at the time: 1) After "test sleeping" my Game Boy Advance, I actually managed to sleep for a little bit. Human babies don't sleep a lot, but they do have sleeping periods. I was wondering if it would be possible to program game functionality while asleep, and let it rest. After asking the internet for "sleep Game Boy", I found a number of people's aggregated efforts: sleep-mode mini-games, and even a custom game called "Play My Record" based on a positive forward tick pattern. In each case, it's a small puzzle/chance game that appears to rest your game and load later. Here's an example: This is also known as ITC's famous Reverse Image Recovery and is quite popular with Game Stop employees. 2) I went on to experiment with the circuitry inside the Game Boy Advance. For example, to run a TV on the front, it has to be a TV with an analog signal. As you know, there's no such thing as an IR

You can build your own dynasty and forge your own path, like a hero of old in search of glory. History unfolds before your eyes, as you explore the land of the kings. Travel the country with your friend and adviser, climb mountains or dive into the deep seas, and make yourself a legend in your land. The game is set in a world governed by fate and ruled by a Goddess who shepherds a collection of pretty much immortal people. The people are divided into a host of tribes, each with its own gods. The Goddesses themselves are a collection of their own, with their own divine traits, and they are eager to see how the world evolves as you fight your way toward the glorious death. Each God decides how the world unfolds at the end of each turn, with their own in-game time system. Events in the game will happen in real time as you make decisions, but the end of the turn occurs at their real time, too. Some Gods might choose to be silent or act immediately, which can change your game-over conditions. Your actions and the races you choose will affect how the world unfolds and how events will unfold from then onwards. A game about building your own destiny, Influence is a fantasy
